

- What do I want to learn or understand better?

I briefly looked into the web development process but realized it was more complicated than I previously had expected. It's nothing like the programming I'm used to. We did set up a server of sorts which is cool, it feels like a huge step in the right direction and will allow us to work more efficiently moving on. I want to continue learning about web development, but I think I will have to change my approach and learn about it more incrementally instead of trying to learn everything at once and getting overwhelmed. I also want to get better at working with Scrum. I will continue reading up on the topic, but I believe just working together with my group will allow me to understand it better and get more used to it.

- How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

Same as previous weeks. Although I feel like I'm starting to get to know my group members a little which is making me slightly more comfortable in offering help. I hope that once we get more of a layout done for our project that there will be more things I can help with or teach.

- What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

I was active in all the meetings this sprint and participated a lot in coming up with user stories. For future sprints I believe I will be able to offer more value to the team's Scrum usage simply by getting more experience regarding the topic.

- What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

This week we didn't really do a lot of coding. One group member was responsible for setting up the server while the rest basically just set up our coding environments and made sure that everything worked properly. I would like to do more in the future as this week I felt a little restless. Unfortunately, moving on I will try to offer more help to those who need it and hopefully there will be more user stories to work with.
