

- What do I want to learn or understand better?

I feel like this week we got into a nice rhythm, for both the meetings and the user stories. Scrum is, as always, something I want to get better at. The meetings are still a bit long sometimes and I would like to get better at being more efficient during them. We did learn about timeboxing this week, which is something I would like to get better at.

- How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

I still feel the same way I did last week.

- What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

This week I feel like I contributed, just like everyone actually, with having effective meetings and making good user stories. But I would say that we probably should get better at specifying tasks in the user stories, since there was some confusion from some members working on stories they were not a part of writing. I also contributed by reminding us to improve our estimation of the user stories. Last week we did an estimate based on hours we thought each story would take. But time does not equal effort, so I suggested we change it to something else, and we collectively agreed to try shirt sizes, which I think worked great, but time will tell if it is the best option.

- What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

This week I contributed by adding a list of products to the pdf in a list resembling the original pdf our customer used to use. I did work on this with another team member but this person had another user story as well, so we decided on me doing most of this user story. This worked since we communicated about it but I felt like we should have noticed this problem earlier, so that is something to work on.
