

- What do I want to learn or understand better?

I still want to get better at writing user stories and tasks while keeping meetings effective.

- How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

I still feel like the user stories and tasks need more work, and we are trying to learn how to effectively make them and still have them be independent etc. We did get from our TA that every single user story necessarily doesn't need to create direct value for the customer, but at the end of the sprint, they should together create value. So I want to help the team with this.

- What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

I felt like I contributed with remembering the overall scope of the project this week, since the deadline is soon, so that we remembered to do enough per spring left to be able to deliver what is promised. This included making equally difficult and valued user stories and splitting them equally.

- What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

This week was a bit of a combination of last week's supposed delivery and the "planned" delivery for this week. As stated in the last reflection there was some stuff missing from one user story that was needed to connect input to output in the pdf, so that was added to this week's agenda. It worked well, so all is good now, and a lot of value has been delivered to the customer. We improved communications as well so it felt good this week.
